Subject: Election

Good morning, Vincent and Bryan -

I read the news this morning about Gabriel Sterling's press conference reporting threats against your clients regarding the election. I was very disappointed and concerned to see that. The report of someone breaking into a home and turning on all the lights was especially chilling. I hope you and your clients are managing okay and staying safe. It's unfortunate things have come to this, to say the least.

We're especially disappointed to see President Trump's team citing our case to support wild, unsubstantiated theories regarding Hugo Chavez. To be clear, while we continue to believe there are significant vulnerabilities with GA's election system that need to be remedied, per our lawsuit, we don't support the claims of the Trump team based on specific unsubstantiated allegations of systemwide voter fraud intended to rig the election for President-Elect Biden. I know we've not found much common ground in our litigation, but any suggestion that we or our experts support those allegations is simply wrong. While we understand you disagree with our claims, hopefully you understand that we're driven only by facts and science and a nonpartisan desire to address what we believe are unconstitutional deficiencies with the election system. We do not support absurd theories or specific election-outcome-driven positions. We also certainly agree that threats against state officials — or anyone for that matter — are obviously inappropriate, and we hope everyone remains safe and healthy. If there's anything we can do to help, please let us know.

You, your clients, their families, and the many election workers across the state are in our thoughts and prayers. Again, if we can help address these unwarranted and improper attacks, please let us know.

Best regards,
DC
